

Continue the story...

It was the day of the big race. I had been training for months. After four and a half kilometres I felt strong and, as I approached the home straight, only one other runner was in with a chance of winning! She pulled ahead but, with a wince of anguish, collapsed in tears, holding her leg. With fifty metres to go, victory was surely mine!

Continue the story...

It was the day of the big race. I had been training for months. After four and a half kilometres I felt strong and, as I approached the home straight, only one other runner was in with a chance of winning! She pulled ahead but, with a wince of anguish, collapsed in tears, holding her leg. With fifty metres to go, victory was surely mine!

Continue the story...

It was the day of the big race. I had been training for months. After four and a half kilometres I felt strong and, as I approached the home straight, only one other runner was in with a chance of winning! She pulled ahead but, with a wince of anguish, collapsed in tears, holding her leg. With fifty metres to go, victory was surely mine!

Continue the story...

It was the day of the big race. I had been training for months. After four and a half kilometres I felt strong and, as I approached the home straight, only one other runner was in with a chance of winning! She pulled ahead but, with a wince of anguish, collapsed in tears, holding her leg. With fifty metres to go, victory was surely mine!