

Continue the story...

As the sun rose, a herd of gazelles licked their parched lips and made their way, wearily, towards the only drinking hole for miles. They had not drunk for days and, as they approached the shallow waters, it became clear why. Laying in wait were hordes of ravenous, hissing crocodiles. For the gazelles, there was no choice. They had to get what they had come for. It was do or die...

Continue the story...

As the sun rose, a herd of gazelles licked their parched lips and made their way, wearily, towards the only drinking hole for miles. They had not drunk for days and, as they approached the shallow waters, it became clear why. Laying in wait were hordes of ravenous, hissing crocodiles. For the gazelles, there was no choice. They had to get what they had come for. It was do or die...

Continue the story...

As the sun rose, a herd of gazelles licked their parched lips and made their way, wearily, towards the only drinking hole for miles. They had not drunk for days and, as they approached the shallow waters, it became clear why. Laying in wait were hordes of ravenous, hissing crocodiles. For the gazelles, there was no choice. They had to get what they had come for. It was do or die...

Continue the story...

As the sun rose, a herd of gazelles licked their parched lips and made their way, wearily, towards the only drinking hole for miles. They had not drunk for days and, as they approached the shallow waters, it became clear why. Laying in wait were hordes of ravenous, hissing crocodiles. For the gazelles, there was no choice. They had to get what they had come for. It was do or die...